The Dominguez Gap is an area in North Long Beach where two side-channel wetlands parallel the Los Angeles River. Though the River itself is contained in a concrete-lined channel, the constructed wetlands support seasonal bird populations, native plants, and natural treatment of stormwater runoff.

The Los Angeles River empties into the Pacific Ocean near Cesar Chavez Park and the Golden Shore Marine Reserve, a restored tidal wetland area. Its buildings echo the craftsman style common to historic homes in the neighborhood. The riprap embankments of the river, where it becomes very tidal, feature good bird-watching and cool ocean breezes.

201 Golden Shore. The Reserve, accessible from the LARIO trail and not far from the mouth of the River, is a beautiful site, as it is a small sliver of the original wetlands that historically flourished in the area. A birdwatcher's paradise, the site's critical habitat has made it a sanctuary for birds and other local aquatic life.

Golden Shore Marine Reserve:

Visit this wetland where Long Beach River meet, about 1.5 miles from the Del Amo Metro Station. Dominguez Gap is a year-round habitat for plants and native wildlife, and provides recreational activities for a range of opportunities in this 32-acre park.

Dominguez Gap Wetlands:

5000 Slauson Ave, Maywood. This park is an oasis amidst the industrial stretch of the LA River with easy access from the LARIO Trail Slauson exit. The Southeast LA Arts Fest is typically held at this location on the River.

Maywood Riverfront Park:

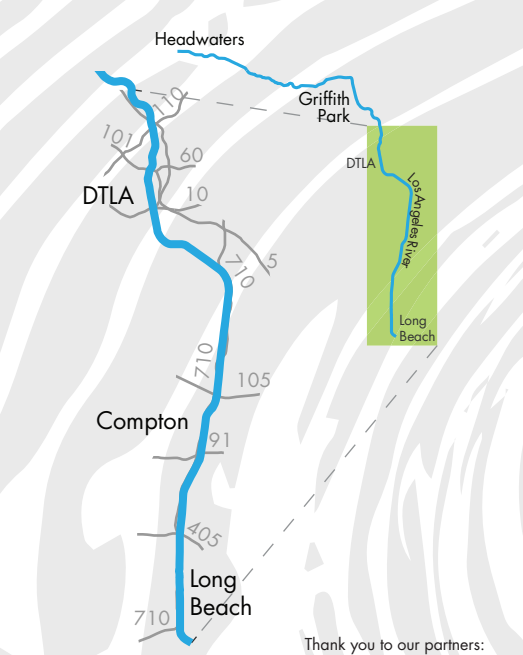

Explore one of LA's newest parks at 1245 N Spring St, one block from the Chinatown Metro Station. Run, walk, picnic, bike, and look for urban LA River channel gets wider and wider on its way to San Pedro Bay. Despite the concrete, this stretch features great bird-watching opportunities since the River still functions as an important migratory corridor for birds. You can also enjoy the longest contiguous bike path along the LA River stretching 17 miles from Vernon to Long Beach, featuring several River-adjacent parks and connections to other regional bikeways.
